nüt(h)ig, adj. necessary, needful; etwas - haben, to need, want, stand in need of, have occasion for; daß -c, the necessities; Mangel an dem -en haben, to want the necessities of life.
Syn. nüt(h)ig, not(h)wendig. What is not(h)wendig cannot be otherwise, whereas that which is nüt(h)ig may be so, though for a certain reason it is not otherwise. A triangle must not(h)wendig have three angles, neither more nor less. Where any one borrows money, he has it nüt(h)ig, e. g. for a building, etc.
nüt(h)igen, v. a. 1. to necessitate, force, constrain, compel; 2. to urge, press; 3. to invite; sich - lassen, fam. to stand upon ceremonies.
Syn. nüt(h)igen, zwingen, verpflichten. Zwingen conveys the idea of compulsion by which any one is genöt(h)igt to do a thing. Verpflichten indicates a moral necessity. The rain nüt(h)igt me to remain at home, i. e. makes it necessary, if I do not wish to get wet. A benefit verpflichtet me to be grateful to my benefactor. Zwingen implies that we do a thing unwillingly, whereas, what we are verpflichtet to do, we often do with pleasure.

 openheartedness, candour; —fun- dig, adj. public, notorious, everywhere known; —fundigkeit, f.
 publicity, notoriousness; —stehend,
adj. open, lying open.

Syn. offenherzig, aufrichtig, freimüt(h)ig. The Offenherzige says everything that he thinks and how he thinks it; the Aufrichtigte merely says what he is obliged or can venture to say, but everything that he does say, is in accordance and harmony with his mode of thinking; the wise man speaks aufrichtig at all times, with tried friends offenherzig, and as often as duty requires it, freimüt(h)ig.

offenbar, adj. manifest, evident,
 obvious, striking, plain, open; public, notorious; —machen, to manifest, publish; —werden, to come to be known, to come out, to take vent; ein —es Recht, a plain right;
 ein —er Verlust, an obvious loss.

offenbarren, v. a. and refl. 1. to manifest, to make public; 2. to reveal;
 3. to discover, disclose, open (a secret); sich or sein Herz —, to unbos-om one's self.

Syn. offenbaren, bekannt machen, eröffnen, anzeigen, entbeden, verrat(h)en. That which is bekannt gemacht is brought to the knowledge of others; that which is angezeigt is intended for the information of one or more whom it more particularly interests or concerns. When we inform a person of anything, in which we ourselves are interested, with a view to influence his will, we eröffnen it to him. That which is bekannt gemacht, angezeigt or eröffnet is not necessarily anything secret; but whatever is offenbart, entbedt or verrat(h)en, has been till then a secret. Entbeden can take place involuntarily, by chance or want of caution and is in this distinguished from offenbaren. Verrat(h)en borders nearly on entbeden, but is distinguished from it in this, that verrat(h)en is commonly an Entbedung of something which in itself is bad and likely to have dangerous consequences; whereas entbeden may be the discovery of an action in itself good and allowed, as also of something, the making known of which is not injurious to the Entbedeten.

Syn. Ort, Platz, Stelle, Stätte. Ort indicates a portion of space without any accessory idea; Platz, a place where anything can rest and remain; Stelle, the place which a thing occupies according to a certain order, determined by the relation of other co-existing things. The Stelle of anything is determined by what is near it. They looked for the Stelle where he was murdered, and found that it was a green Platz surrounded by thick bushes. Stätte contains the accessory idea of rest and continuance. It is, therefore, the proper Stelle in which any individual thing always is. We have here (in this world) no fixed or permanent Stätte.

Syn. Pfaffe, Pfarrer, Priester, Prediger, Geistlicher. Priester is one who officiates in any religious rite, who performs the sacrifices and belongs to the most sacred and revered class. In the Catholic portion of the Christian Church this denomination has been retained, the mass being considered as a sacrifice. The Protestant Church, on the other hand, has no longer any Priester, but only Prediger (religious teachers, preachers). Pfarrer, Pfarrherr, in the Catholic Church, is a Priester, and among the Protestants a Prediger, who has the right to administer his office in a parish (Pfarre) and to enjoy the income attached to it. Pfaffe is a low and contemptuous expression for Priester, vid. Saalspfaffe. Geistliche are all those who belong to that class who devote themselves to the performance of religious duties in contradistinction to the laity.

(h.) to be accustomed, wont; er pflegt zu sagen, he used (he was wont) to say; wie sie zu sagen pflegte, as her saying was; (in most cases the adv. usually, generally gives the mean-ing) as, so pflegt es zu gehen, geschehen u. f. w., thus it generally goes, hap-pens, etc.; nach einem Gewitter pflegt die Luft sich zu fñhlen, after a thunder-storm the air usually gets cool.

Syn. pflegen, gewohnt sein. We pflegen to do a thing, in so far as we repeat an action under similar circumstances; we are gewohnt to do a thing, when we do it willingly or because we conceive it to be good. Thus we pflegen to smoke, when we do so as often as we have the time and opportunity; but we are ge-wohnt to smoke, when we find a pleas-ure in it. Pflegen, therefore, is said of inanimate things, also; gewohnt sein, only of sentient and rational beings.

Syn. Pflicht, Dbliegenheit, Schuldigkeit. Pflicht indicates every kind of moral ne-cessity, whatever its object may be. A Pflicht becomes, however, a Schuldigkeit toward the person we are bound to per-form it, and this an Dbliegenheit, when that which we are bound to do has been undertaken by ourselves or im-posed on us by another. There are Pflichten which no one can require from us; for we have not only Pflichten toward ourselves, but also toward God (which are left to our conscience) and even to-ward animals. Schuldigkeit and Dblie-genheit can be required from us by those to whom we are indebted. There are, however, onerous Pflichten also, and these only can be called Dbliegenheiten.

Syn. platt, flach, niedrig. The Platte has no perceptible elevation, the flache no perceptible depression. The flache hand or palm stands in opposition to the closed hand or fist, and the Oberfläche of a body is its extension in length and breadth without thickness. We call a witticism flach, when it does not go far into things, platt, when it is poor, common or vulgar. For we conceive the beautiful, the exquisite, etc., as something raised above what is common. In painting, however, platt and flach are used synonymously; they are often confounded also in common conversation. Platt and niedrig differ, in so much as platt betrays a visible want of wit and sense, niedrig a want of nobleness of sentiments. Platte flattery is undisguised and insipid; niedrige flattery discovers mean sentiments.

Syn. Plag, Raum. Plag implies a surface on which things may rest and move. When Raum is considered as synonymous with it, we understand leerer Raum, in each of the three dimensions. By Plag is generally understood, however, only a part of Raum. The Plag of a thing, therefore, is the part of an entire Raum, which everything takes upon it. Plag is always limited; leerer Raum is conceived as unlimited. Plag is a definite part of Raum.

Plump, } m. and int. plump,

Plumpß, } bounce.

plump, adj. blunt, coarse; heavy, awkward, unwieldy.

Syn. I. plump, schwerfällig, unbehüßlich. Unbehüßlich indicates awkwardness in motion, plump and schwerfällig its causes; the former implying the remote, the latter the proximate and immediate cause. The Plümpe has too great a mass and too rude a form. The galleons of the famous invincible fleet were plump engines and on that account extremely schwerfällig, so that they were too unbehüßlich to escape the skilful manœuvring of the English ships.

Syn. II. plump, bäuerlich, unbehüßlich, grob, läppisch. The Zöpel displeases by his clumsy motions arising from awkwardness; the Bäuerliche displeases in his language, actions and manners from want of perception of what is becoming; but neither can be said to offend. The Plümpe and Grobe, however, fall in the respect which is due to others; the first merely from want of delicacy of feeling, the latter also from pride and contempt. The Plümpe, Grobe and Unbehüßliche violate the respect due to others; the Unbehüßliche merely omits what good breeding requires; the Grobe is really offensive both in language and actions.

Syn. Prunt, Pracht, Gepränge, Pomp, Präfereſt. Pomp approaches nearest to Pracht. It is an augmentation of the idea of Pracht, and indicates Pracht suited only for the highest or most distinguished persons, and on the most solemn occasions. Gepränge approaches more nearly to Prunt. It signifies, in its origin, a frequent prangen; it is not, however, always without internal worth; only when it is vain and empty it is Prunt. Still lower than Prunt is Präfereſt, for this seeks to excite attention and admiration by excellencies which it does not possess or, at least, not in the degree it pretends to.

pünkt'lich, I. adj. punctual; zu —, punctilious; II. adv. punctually.

Syn. pünktlich, genau. Genau refers more to the thing in relation to which we act, pünktlich more to the time. We arrive pünktlich at a certain place by sea, when the charts are quite genau. A pünktlicher man is, properly, he who does everything at the appointed time. They are often, however, confounded; but never in such a way that he whom we call a genauet or close man can be considered also a pünktlicher man.

 Syn. Puſ, Schmuck, Zierde, Zierat(h), Verzierung, puſen, ſchmücken, zieren. Puſen implies properly a lower degree of beautifying; ſchmücken and zieren, a higher. Peasants puſen their rooms when they sweep and dust them. Schmuck embellishes a thing by splendour and costliness, Zierat(h)en by intrinsic beauty. Puſen, in general, therefore, means to embellish; ſchmücken, to embellish by splendour and costliness or on solemn festivals; zieren, to embellish by the addition of something in itself beautiful, but the beauty of which consists more in the exquisiteness of the form than in splendour or costliness. Zierde, Zierat(h), Verzierung, imply that with which anything is geziert or embellished; with this difference, however, that Zierde is applied also figuratively (e. g. modesty is the greatest Zierde of youth), and the two others not; while Zierat(h)en are mere trifies with which we seek to embellish anything. It is not every Zierat(h) in a building which is also a Verzierung.

Qual, f. (pl. -en) pain, torment, torture, pang, grief, affliction; in compos. —belastet, adj. * loaded with pain or torments; —erfüllt, adj. vid. —voll; —göttin(n), f. Fury; —voll, adj. and adv. full of pain, torments or anguish.

Syn. Qual, Pein, Warter, Fötter, Plage. Pein indicates the extent of pain as to its violence, Qual as to its duration. Pein implies, therefore, the generic idea of pain, Qual the various species of it. This is evident also from the fact that Qual has a plural, whereas Pein has not. Hence mere annoyances, which we strive to get rid of, can also quälen. The uncertainty whether what we design to do be right and good, often quält the best and most conscientious, but after a had action the conscience of the had man peinigt him. Children quälen an affectionate mother with their unreasonable requests. Fötter and Warter are synonymous with Qual and Pein only in their figurative sense. Plage implies every kind of molestation. rech't fertigen, v. a. vid. under compos. of Rech't, s.

Rech't fertigung, f. vid. under compos. of Rech't, s.

Syn. Rechtfertigung, Entschuldigung, Schutzbeweis, Vert(h)eidigung, Verantwortung, Schutzschrift. When we try to prove that we have not done something had of which we are accused, or that what we have done is not bad, we undertake our Rechtfertigung. When, however, we grant that we have done it, and that it is wrong, we can only adduce reasons to diminish our culpability, and these serve as our Entschuldigung. A Schutzbeweis can do both. Maternal tenderness entschuldigt a mother's indulgence for the rudeness of her children, but does not rechtfertigen it. When a Schutzbeweis contains merely an Entschuldigung, it is still distinguished from the latter by its presupposing an accusation, which Entschuldigung does not. A Vert(h)eidigung may either take place with arms, where one is forcibly attacked, or it may be only verbal against reproaches or accusations. A Schutzschrift is a written Schutzbeweis. Verantwortung differs from Vert(h)eidigung as relating only to an accusation of unjust actions, and secondly, that we can Verantwortung only our own actions, but we can rechtfertigen those of another. Verantwortung is distinguished from Schutzbeweis in this, that by the latter we also Vert(h)eidigen another against an accusation, but by a Verantwortung only ourselves.

Syn. reden, sprechen, sagen. Sprechen is merely to utter the sounds which the words in any language require; reden, to express by words its sense; sagen relates to what is uttered, whether it be the mere sounds or the subject of discourse. Parrots and some other birds may be said to sprechen; hut it would be absurd to say that a parrot had geredet a long time. Sagen is more immediately related with "to tell, to explain," as, tell me (sagen Sie mir) where he lives (not reden Sie, or sprechen Sie mir). It is, however, the same thing whether we say sagen, reden, or sprechen Sie mit nicht davon, do not speak to me about it.

Syn. Ruhe, Raht, Friede. Ruhe, in general, is that state in which we do not move; Raht, that in which a fatiguing motion ceases. Hence Raht is said only of living beings, for these only feel the fatigue of motion and the want of repose. Ruhe, on the contrary, is used of bodies whether inanimate or living. Raht, moreover, only succeeds to motion in order to continue it. Ruhe can precede all motion and continue forever. We resten only after bodily motion; but there is also an internal Ruhe—that of the soul and mind. That state in which the mind is not agitated by any emotion is called Ruhe; Friede, when not agitated by unpleasant emotions.

sammeln, v. I. a. to collect, gather, heap up, treasure up; II. refl. to gather, collect, to increase, accumulate; fig. sich —, to collect one's self, one's thoughts; wo ein Was ist, da — sich die Adler, prov. wherever there is carrion, crows will collect.

Syn. sammeln (sich), versammeln (sich), zusammenkommen. Etich versammeln implies to come together singly, accidentally or by degrees; hence it may be said equally of things or of persons and animals. Water sammelt sich in a pit; people sammeln sich in the market; where carrion is, vultures sammeln sich. Etich versammeln indicates, besides this, generally the aim of coming together, as, to deliberate on something, to celebrate a feast, etc. The citizens versammeln sich in the town-hall, they sammeln sich in the meadow. Zusammenkommen is the mere general term, and is distinguished from the others by being used also of two only, whereas the others can only be said of many.

Syn. Œchände, Œchümpf, Œchmach, Œnjurie, Entehrung. Whatever diminishes the worthiness of any one in the eyes of others is for him a Œchände; that which is a mark of dishonour for him is a Œchümpf; when this consists in such a treatment as implies the want of every honourable feeling it becomes a Œchmach. Œchümpf and Œnjurie are distinguished from each other in this, that the former indicates any treatment by which a man suffers in his character, whether his honour had before been forfeited or not; Œnjurie, when his honour is intact. Entehrung arises either from the judicial sentence of the forfeiture of any one's honour or from the conversion of the favourable opinion of his moral worth into an injurious one.

Syn. scharf, scharfsichtig, scharfsinnig, fein, durchdringend. A scharf mind discovers in an object things which from their inconsiderableness and fineness are difficult to be perceived; a scharfsichtiger perceives everything easily; a durchdringer discovers even what lies deepest and most concealed. The scharfsinnig mind discovers the most delicate characteristics of things, which perhaps a mind more sound but less delicate overlooks. Great interest makes us scharfsichtig, and the most ordinary minds become so when self-interest is mainly concerned.

Syn. Schärfe, Strenge. Schärfe shows itself in the exactness with which faults are examined; Strenge is the degree of displeasure and punishment with which they are visited. He who does not overlook a single fault is scharf; he who is not indulgent toward a single one is streng.

Scharfen, v. a. to sharpen, whet; Er-schärfung scharft den Verstand, experience sharpens the wit; die Strafe —, to heighten, aggravate the punishment; sich —, to graze one's self.

Syn. scharfen, weßen, schleifen. We scharfen that which is still blunt and not able to cut; we weßen that which already cuts, but which we wish to cut better; and that which we schleifen not only is scharfer, but it becomes also smoother and more polished, or acquires the particular form we wish to give it.

Syn. II. Schmerz, Traurigkeit, ßetribnis, ßeit. As long as a disagreeable sensation is still novel, recent, or acute, it is Schmerz (pain or suffering); as soon, however, as the first Schmerz has lost a portion of its violence, it leaves behind it a Traurigkeit (sadness, etc.) and Betrübniß (affliction, etc.) which are of a milder nature. Schmerz is, therefore, the condition of a more exquisite sensibility or sensation than Traurigkeit and Betrübniß. Der Traurige as well as der Betrübte complains, but great Schmerz is passively silent. Leid is chagrin, vexation, or annoyance, and is that sorrow or grief felt under some misfortune occasioned by our fellow creatures, more especially so should it be coupled with injustice.

Syn. I. Schuld, Ursache. Schuld can only be employed for "cause," when the effect and motive are bad, but Ursache (cause) may be used indifferently, whether the effect and motive be good or bad.

Syn. II. schuldblos, unschuldig. Schuld may be considered in two points of view. It is guilt or a fault, when it conveys the impression of a neglect of moral duty, together with its imputation and harm; when it implies an injury committed or a wrong sustained. This last idea prevails in unschuldig (harmless), the first in schuldblos (guiltless, faultless); children are said to be unschuldig (innocent) because they are incapable of doing anything wicked; when certain pleasures, games, sports, etc., are said to be unschuldig (innocent, innocuous), all that is meant to be conveyed is that they are not detrimental; those are schuldblos (guiltless, innocent) which are not opposed to any moral law.

Syn. schwanken, wanken, wackeln, taumeln. Schwanken (the intensive form of wanken) denotes a more violent motion by which a lofty body inclines nearer to the surface of the ground, and threatens to fall, should it be very heavy; wanken, for instance, schwanken (rock, reel, waver) from a violent earthquake; wanken denotes a less violent motion, when incipient, and is "to waver;" wackeln expresses the movement of those things which ought to stand firm, but which do not stand sufficiently so. Taumeln is to move backward and forward irregularly as a living being may do; out of wackeln arises the capability of moving from one side to another from a want of firmness. A table wackelt (is rickety or loose); the milk-teeth begin to wackeln (grow loose) as soon as nature intends them to be shed. A man taumelt (stagger or reels) when giddy, when drunk, when only half awake or stupefied.

Schwerd, } n. vid. Schwert.
Schwerdt, }
Schwere, f. 1. weight, heaviness; 2. gravity; 3. fig. hardness, difficulty; die absolute —, absolute gravity; die relative —, relative gravity; die spezifische —, specific gravity; — im Mittelpunt ber —, centre of gravity.

Syn. Schwere, Gewicht, Wucht; schwer, wichtig. Schwere and Gewicht are rendered manifest not only by motion, but also by pressure on the body that opposes the central or centripetal force. Wucht is, properly speaking, evident alone by force of momentum. Bodies differing from each other as to Gewicht (weight or specific gravity) fall with equal velocity in a vacuum, and therefore are of the same absolute Schwere (absolute gravity). Hence it appears that Schwere is heaviness or gravity, Gewicht weight, and Wucht ponderousness, ponderance. In a figurative sense, that which is schwer (heavy) requires much force or power, and that which is wichtig (weighty) produces great effects, is effective. It is eine schwere Frage (a difficult, grave question) what constitution or form of government may be the best, but it is wichtig (important, momentous) that the government be carried on as it ought to be.

segnen, v. a. 1. to bless; utter a benediction; 2. to make the sign of the cross; to cross; 3. to spell, enchant; 4. + to utter an imprecation, to curse.

Syn. segnen, (einen) einsegnen, (einem) den Segen geben. Segnen (to bless) is principally distinguished from den Segen geben (to give the blessing or benediction) by this, that the former represents also the mere inward wish, while the latter expresses that wish by words or other signs. Thus the priest, at the close of divine service, gibt den Segen (gives the blessing) to his congregation; he gives also the nuptial benediction at the altar, etc. Einsegnen is to consecrate, also to devote by a blessing or by invoking the grace of God (e. g. children at confirmation).

Syn. sehen, ansehen, gaffen, angaffen, gucken, spähen, blicken. The act of directing the eyes to any object is expressed by ansehen (to look at); the ocular perception of that object by sehen (to see). He who wants to sehen (see) anything properly, must ansehen (look at) it, and he who anseht anything within the scope of his vision, supposing his sight to be perfect, will also sehen (see) it. Ansehen without attention is gaffen or angaffen, i. e. to gaze or stare stupidly, to gape at. The Gaffer (gaper, starrer, gazer) has his eyes wide open without seeing distinctly, or without being exactly conscious of what he really is seeing. Angaffen differs from gaffen in implying a definite object, while the latter is to gape at anything. Gucken expresses a part of the meaning of sehen, viz.: that part denoting the direction of the eyes to the object, but implies besides the inquisitive approximation of the head toward the same. It is hence "to peep, peer, look inquisitively." Spähen is to squint, and blicken is to blink, accompanied with winking, i. e. "to blink and wink."

Self'mann, m. (—eß; pl. —männer) a leash-bound; name of a leash-bound.
self'ten, adj. rare, scarce; unfrequent, seldom; extraordinary.
Syn. Setzen, settsam. Setzen is an attribute of anything that is seldom found or possessed; it implies something which always has a certain value derived from the very fact of its being uncommon, and very often it produces admiration, pride or delight; it is, therefore, equivalent to "rare, scarce"; on the other hand settsam is an epithet that conveys the idea of something not only uncommon, but likewise unusual, that differs from what our mind conceives to be true to the laws of nature, of sound reason, of universal custom, thereby exciting always surprise, very often risibility and perhaps contempt; hence it is aptly explained by strange, odd, or the familiar word queer; both words may sometimes be explained by singular or curious; if it makes us laugh or sneer, settsam often answers to funny, droll.
Self'tenheit, f. (pl. —en) rareness, rarity, scarcity; —en, pl. rarities, curiosities.
Self'ter (ß) wasser, n. Seltzer water.
self'tam, adj. 1. strange, odd, irregular, wonderful; 2 + rare; es sieht — aus, it affords a strange sight, it looks odd.
Syn. Settsam, unglaublich, wunderlich, wunderbar, wunderbar. All these words, with the exception of unglaublich, have reference to the object or subject itself; unglaublich (incredible) expresses an opinion or judgment upon the possibility or reality of the said object, etc. Wunderlich (queer) refers merely to every action proceeding from our will or fancy, to every idea, etc., that is repugnant to stern reason or sober judgment; it is, therefore, either singular, eccentric, or whimsical. A capricious or fanciful man is wunderlich (singular, odd, whimsical), his actions are wunderlich (surprising, extraordinary), his ideas are wunderlich (eccentric, strange, fantastic). Wunderbar is wondrous, and wunderbar is wonderful. Settsam is that which from being unusual or eccentric appears generally to be wrong or improper; it is, therefore, strange, odd, queer, singular, curious. Vid. also setten.

seufzen, v. n. (h.) and a. to sigh, groan; nach etwas —, to sigh for after.

Syn. Seufzen, ächzen, stöhnen. Seufzen (sighing) is produced as well by a deep and long-drawn inspiration as by a strong expiration. Ächzen and stöhnen are the strong expulsion of the breath attended with a painful sound. Seufzen is, moreover, the more subdued expression of a mental suffering. Ächzen shows the immediate presence of a pang or throe, and stöhnen reveals the exhausting exertion of enduring suffering. The strict censor seufzet (sighs) over the corruption of the times. A patient ächzt (groans, utters a groan) when racked by a pain. A man ready to sink under a burden, one mortally wounded, stöhnt. It seems, therefore, that ächzen is to groan acutely, and stöhnen to utter low, moaning or deep groans, to groan heavily or gaspingly.

Syn. Spalten, trennen. In the first place, one spaltet (cleaves, splits, rends asunder) only solid and tough or stiff bodies; one trennt (separates or parts) fluids, and amongst the solids such as are easily divisible. The seas on our globe are gently separated by the mainland, but not gespalten; a great and continued heat on the other hand often spaltet (cracks or chaps) the ground. Then again, one spaltet (splits) that which was intimately connected and bound together; one trennt (separates) that which, without being intimately connected, was considered as one whole the parts of which, after the separation, begin to exist as independent wholes.

Spalter, m. (-s; pl. —) wood-cleaver.

spaltig, adj. 1. chinky; having fissures; 2. that may be cleft; fig. divided, disunited.

Spaltung, f. (pl. -en) cleavage; fig. disunion, division, rupture; schism.

Syn. Spaltung, Trennung, Zerwürfniß. Disagreements among the members of a society are only mere Spaltungen (splits, divisions, differences, disunion, schism), so long as these members do not secede and set up a separate society of their own; the moment this takes place, a complete Trennung (separation) follows. Even among the very early Christians there were several Spaltungen (differences), but those Spaltungen were no Trennungen, since they still formed one congregation or church as before, and did not give rise to a sect. When the Spaltung (breach of concord or unanimity) is accompanied with ill-will and hostile demonstrations, so as to lead to a breach of the previous good order, it is then a Zerwürfniß (an open rupture).

Syn. Spieß, Speer, Lanze. The two first words (= Spieß), which were originally the same, differ, however, now in this, that Speer is the superior word; one says the Spieß (pike, halberd) of a night-watchman, of an Uhlan, the Speer (spear) of a knight. The Lanze (Lat. lancea) is so called, either because it is long (lang), or from the French lancee (to throw, dart), so that Lanze (lance) was in its primitive meaning tantamount to Wurſtpieß (javelin, dart).

Syn. Spotten (über einen), aufziehen (einen), aufhalten (sich über einen), läbeln (einen). Spotten and sich aufhalten differ in the first place from aufziehen in this, that one only aufzieht (quizzes, banter, rallies) persons, but one spottet (mocks, derides) and sich aufhält (censures) also über things, actions and opinions; moreover, that when it concerns individuals, a man may spotten über (ridicule) them and sich aufhalten (aimadvert) upon others even in thought, but one can only aufziehen (banter) them when they are present. Spotten and aufziehen differ again from sich aufhalten in this, that the two former consider the object as ridiculous, while the latter seriously expresses blame or censure.

Syn. Stamm, Abstammung, Abkunft, Geburt. Geburt (hirth) denotes one's origin from one's parents; Stamm (stock, stem, house) from the founder of one's family or line; Abstammung (descent) one's connection with this founder by means of one's forefathers, ancestors or parentage; and Abkunft (extraction, lineage, race) one's connection with any progenitor, even if he should not be the most remote ancestor or founder. He who inherits on the part of the person so nobility is not of noble Geburt, but his children are, though not of noble Abkunft, still less of noble Abstammung and noble Stamm.

Stäm'meln, v. a. and n. (ß.) to stammer, stutter, hammer in speaking; to lisp; fig. to falter, pronounce, express in a faltering voice.

Syn. Stammeln, stottern, fallen. Stottern implies an interruption or break, and then a repetition of words or syllables accompanied by a painful feeling of exertion on the part of the person so speaking. It arises either from a natural defect or from an unfortunate habit. It is, therefore, identical with our "to stutter." Stammeln and fallen merely imply an imperfect utterance without the accompanying defects of stottern. The children fallen or stammeln, when their tongue, as yet imperfectly trained, utters words only partially or incorrectly; stammeln is, therefore, almost the same as our "to stammer." fallen is the stronger word of the two, expressing the higher degree. Hence it is sometimes equivalent to our "to mutter;" in choice or poetical language it may be rendered by "to lisp."

Syn. Stellung, Stand. Stand is merely the place where the body appears to rest; Stellung indicates as well the relation of its height and the plane on which it reposes to the whole surface of the earth, as likewise that of its sides to those things which are contiguous. The vertical Stand is the most advantageous and also the most graceful Stellung for a tree, column or tower. Hence Stellung is "situation, posture or attitude," and Stand "position."

Syn. Steuern, wehren (einer Sache). The former, originally equivalent to stich, signifies more to the right of setting certain limits to a thing or person, the latter more to the means adopted for checking an evil. God steuert dem Sünder, i. e. causes or induces him to turn aside, restrains him from the path of sin; we must wehren (check, put a stop to) the idleness of a child, vid. bewehren. Hence the former seems to be "to restrain, to repress," and the latter "to guard against, to ward off."

Syn. I. Stoß, Stab, Steden. The two former correspond to the English "stick, staff," vid. Sirtenstab, Zauberstab, Wanderstab, Bettelstab u. s. w. Hence Stab is the more elegant word of the two, and is in poetry is often rendered by "wand." Steden is a small or thin Stoß, and is also a lower expression, Stoß being the usual term for a walking-stick; Steden is, therefore, the English "rod" or "switch."

Syn. II. Stoß, Stauhe, Strauch, Busch. The Stauhe, the Strauch, and the Busch are woody or ligneous, and send forth several stems from one common root; the Strauch, however, differs from the Stauhe in that its numerous little stems are so twisted and distorted that they appear entangled, and the eye is baffled when attempting to trace them out individually. Strauch is, therefore, the frutex or real shrub, while Stauhe is more the shrub or low dwarf-tree. A wide-spreading Strauch, when it consists of numerous little stems, all of them proceeding from one root, growing in a tangle or maze and having a great quantity of leaves, is called a Busch (bush). A Stoß is one single stem, e. g. Wolfsstiel, Reitenstiel, Lebtenstiel.

Syn. Strafe, Buße, Züchtigung. Buße is the indemnification, reparation, amends which a person who has done wrong or who has committed an injury has to make either by reimbursement or otherwise; Buße is therefore atonement; every other suffering which he has to undergo for the crime or wrong committed is the Strafe, i. e. penalty or punishment; when the party that inflicts the punishment has the intention of producing the reformation of the party punished, the Strafe is a Züchtigung or chastisement. Some Strafen may be Züchtigungen at the same time. They are Strafen, as the deserved and proportionate consequences of a crime; they are Züchtigungen as a means of improvement. The Zuchtstrafe (capital punishment) can for this reason be no Züchtigung, for in this life no reformation can be effected by it.

Syn. Stro'phe, Ver's. Verse (verses) are the smallest metrical parts of a poem; a single line is therefore also called a Ver's, and a Stro'phe in a strain or song is said to consist of so many verses. Moreover, in this sense verses are distinguished by their feet, and a verse which consists of lambics is termed an lambic verse or line; if of trochees, a trochaic verse or line. Hence the German Ver's is a verse or line, and the Stro'phe (strophe) is a verse or stanza.

Syn. Stube, Kammer, Zimmer, Gemach, Saal, Stur. Stuben are those parts of the house which are usually and mostly occupied, and in northern climates containing each a stove or fireplace for warming the apartment in cold weather. A Kammer is not usually used as a sitting-room, and is therefore not generally furnished with a stove, vid. Schlafkammer, Steibekammer, Speisekammer. In superior dwelling-houses those handsome and convenient rooms which are fitted up for one's usual occupation are called Zimmer, and in a higher style Gemach; vid. Schlafgemach. A Saal is a spacious and wide Zimmer, only intended for company. Stur is that space which is at the entrance of a house, between the Zimmer, and is also sometimes called the Vorstall. Hence Stube is a sitting-room or parlour, Kammer, chamber, Zimmer, room, Gemach, apartment, Saal, drawing-room, and Stur the anteroom, when not on the ground-floor, for then it is the hall.

Syn. Stufe, Staffel, Grad. Stufe and Staffel (originally identical) always allude to height or depth; one says the Staffeln
 or Stufen before a house, in a cellar, etc.
 Grad means a definite quantity of any thing in scientific language. Thus, the parts of a circle are termed Grade, and a circle is divided into Grade (degrees) and not into Stufen (steps). A thermometer, a gauge, etc., are similarly divided by Grade.

Syn. Stumm, sprachlos. Stumm (dumb) is that which utters no sound; sprachlos (speechless) merely that which cannot speak (as sometimes man). Therefore all animals should not be said to be naturally stumm, but sprachlos. For some, such as different birds of song, utter many varied sounds or notes, and they only verstümmen (are or become dumb) under peculiar circumstances. In this sense certain animals alone (e.g. fishes)
 are completely stumm.

Syn. Tadel, Mißfallen, Mißbilligung, Mißfallen (dislike or displeasure) is the reverse of Gefallen, and consists, in the first place, of a mere feeling for which we often can neither account to ourselves nor assign the reason to others; that which we tadeln (blame or censure) and mißbilligen (disapprove), implies faults of which we are clearly conscious and which we can show or, at all events, think we can. Mißfallen can be limited to the mere feeling and he kept confined in one's own mind, but when a person tadeln and mißbilligen, he lets his opinion be known either with intelligible signs or more generally with words. Lastly, irrational and even inanimate things and their effects may also mißfallen (displease) us, but we tadeln and mißbilligen only for actions and their effects.
